Tualatin Country Club Study Highlights Significant Economic Contribution to Community

Tualatin, OR — Tualatin Country Club has released a 2025 Economic Impact Study demonstrating the Club's meaningful contribution to the local and regional economy through employment, local purchasing, and guest activity.

The study, based on conservative operating projections and standard economic analysis methods, estimates that Tualatin Country Club generates $10–$11 million in total annual economic impact, supporting more than 100 jobs directly and indirectly throughout the region.

“This study reinforces what many already know, that Tualatin Country Club plays an important role in supporting local families, businesses, and the broader community,” said David Rabiner, Board President for Tualatin Country Club. “We wanted to ensure we had a clear, accurate picture of our economic footprint and how it extends beyond the Club itself.”

Key Economic Highlights

- $10–$11 million in total annual economic impact
- Approximately $6.6 million in direct economic activity
- 100+ jobs supported across hospitality, services, and related industries
- $165,000 annually in property tax contributions

The analysis reflects the Club’s ongoing commitment to local employment, regional vendor partnerships, and its role in welcoming guests to the City of Tualatin. Notably, the study does not include speculative off-site visitor spending, making the estimates intentionally conservative.

Beyond financial impact, Tualatin Country Club contributes to community vitality by preserving open space as an International Audubon Sanctuary, enhancing quality of life through health and exercise, and serving as a long-standing institutional partner within the City.

The Economic Impact Study was prepared for internal planning and community engagement purposes and may be referenced in future discussions with civic leaders and stakeholders.
